

GOP Talking Immigration Reform Ahead of Elections

Published on Wed, Mar 24, 2010

Today, Immigration Impact, the blog of the Immigration Policy Center, reported on a shift in tactics in the immigration debate: A growing number of Republican lawmakers say the party needs to adjust its positions on Comprehensive Immigration Reform (CIR) in order to boost Latino support:

More Republicans have acknowledged that the GOP must change its tune on Latinos and immigration, especially in the lead-up to midterm elections. This week, RNC Chair Michael Steele not only agreed to a meeting with an immigration advocacy group (after the group staged a sit-in), but went a step further to say that he's concerned with harsh GOP rhetoric on immigration...

Published in the The Washington Independent

Source URL:

<http://www.immigrationpolicy.org/newsroom/clip/gop-talking-immigration-reform-ahead-elections>